*User prompt: Based on the stylized 3D animated series workflow we've built so far—following our character from working intensely at her office desk, answering a call, getting overwhelmed and blowing a raspberry/sighing, and spinning into an intro sequence—here are three directions we could take the next scene: * The Dramatic Exit / Walkout: * The Scene: The intro sequence settles, and she decides she's done with work for the day. She stands up, grabs her bag from the stack of books/tote bag on the desk, and confidently struts out of the office through the glass corridor, giving a sassy look back or heading out into the parking lot. * Vibe: "I'm quitting / I'm taking a long lunch" main character energy. * The Coffee Break / Potted Plant Intermission: * The Scene: Cutting from the intro directly to the side station by the window. She uses the electric kettle to pour hot water, makes herself a drink, and takes a moment to dramatically sigh or talk to one of the office plants while looking out at the parking lot. * Vibe: Relatable office humor / slice-of-life comedy. * The Confrontation / Meeting: * The Scene: Someone knocks on the glass door or walks into her office (maybe a colleague or boss). She turns around swivel-chair style, crosses her arms with a funny, expressive animated facial expression, and a playful conversation starts. * Vibe: Narrative story progression. Which direction sounds best to you, or do you have a specific plot point in mind? Generate video*

User prompt: Where should we push this story? Im thinking we start with her setting the muh on the table. Its steaming hot. Then ee see a clock overlay going round to show time flying then the clock dissapear and we see that she takes a sip of her coffee and its cold. She yastes it and is like mehh. And she reheats it again for the third time.

User prompt: Where should we go next?

Response: That coffee gag is such a relatable, classic slice-of-life moment! It really grounds her character.

To keep this momentum going, here are three fun ways we could take the story right after the third microwave trip:

1. The Microwave Meltdown (or Explosion):
    - The Scene: Since she's heating it for the third time, the cup finally gives out or something goes comically wrong—maybe the mug gets way too hot to handle, or the microwave literally pings with a dramatic pop. She just stares at it, completely deadpan, questioning her life choices.
2. The Distraction / Deep Focus Vortex:
    - The Scene: She finally gets her warm coffee back to the desk, takes a triumphant sip, and instantly gets sucked back into her laptop screen to write some intense code. Time blurs again as the camera pans to her furiously typing away while the coffee sits untouched and goes cold again.
3. The Interruption Arrival:
    - The Scene: She takes that fresh, warm sip, closes her eyes in pure bliss—and right at that exact second, someone knocks loudly on the glass corridor door or her phone starts ringing relentlessly once more.

Which direction feels right for the next clip?

User prompt: Next scene. Bssed on the girl. She is taking us through her day in the life
